

VCI (Vapour Corrosion Inhibitor) is a means of protecting metals against corrosion and oxidation. The inhibitor effect is achieved when the protective VCI vapours spread through an enclosed space, leaving a thin layer of protective product on the surface of the metal. This protection will last as long as the product remains within the enclosed space. Once the content is removed from the packaging, the VCI layer vanishes, leaving the product dry and free from corrosion.

